The left and right pages of the 1864 Douro Township Assessment Roll. The entries are calendared (sorted by first letter only) – this is a page from the H section. The first line is that of the author's great great grandfather, John Hamlin, who was the freeholder of 20 acres at Douro C5 L24 that was in School Section 10.

The left and right pages of the 1853 Douro Township Collector Roll. These entries are by roll number, making searching more difficult. The second entry is for John Hamlin again, here spelled Hammelin. He was the freeholder of one lot in Lakefield, 1/3 acre, value £10, no taxable personal property or income. He paid a penny to support the lunatic asylum (which does not match the printed instructions for that column), 7 1/2 pence county rate, 3 1/2 pence for what may be the township rate (column 14), and five

The other columns appear to be the taxes for different school sections (Sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 in columns 15 to 19, and section 8 in column 24). Column 23 is likely the school section – John was in section 9, which did not pay taxes. The third entry is for Edward Leigh and the remark says "left the country and no property to be distrained." Mr Leigh has apparently abandoned the 87 acres of broken lot Douro C7 L20.

How to Use This Book

Few genealogists appreciate the gold mine that municipal records can provide. Municipalities provided an astonishing variety of records, all of them local (by definition!) and many just loaded with names of people living in that locality. This source is not well-known because you must know the municipality your ancestor was in, you have to know where that municipality's records are now and the records will almost certainly be completely, totally, absolutely un-indexed.

Although searching municipal records will never be simple, this book attempts to make the process somewhat easier. Here you will find a basic history that will show you what to look for, depending on the time period you are interested in. There is a description of the many different documents municipalities produced, so you will know which to search first. There are six appendices listing every municipality in Ontario that could have produced records. Two more appendices give details on Assessment Rolls and Collector Rolls, showing what information can be found in them in different time periods.

Like so much in the early history of Ontario, the municipal system was created on one model and ended up as something quite different. The history is quite complex; this description is only the briefest of overviews. Municipal government can be divided into three periods, with 31 December 1849 and the early 1960s as dividing points

Before 1850

Municipal government started in 1788, when what is now Ontario was part of the colony of Quebec. The huge influx of Loyalists fleeing the rebellious American colonies created a need for local administration. Two entities were created: townships, essentially for land surveys; and districts, for administration and courts. In 1792, counties were created to fulfil three functions: political ridings, an organizational base for the militia and – apparently – the structure for a landed aristocracy on the British model. Some of the counties had several ridings.

The Loyalists so overwhelmed the system that some townships were numbered, receiving names later. Unfortunately the numbering system is confusing (it seems head office in Quebec City used a different set of numbers than the local administrators). Information on numbered townships is contained in Appendix 1.

Information on Districts is contained in Appendix 2, on Counties in Appendix 3, and on named Townships in Appendix 4. Some maps are on pages 17 and 18.

Prior to 1800, there was no match between District and County. Several counties were divided between two districts. However a re-organization of districts in 1800 ensured each county was contained within one district. In 1800 the original four districts were expanded to seven. Over time the number of districts increased until by 1849 there were twenty, eleven of which consisted of only one county each.

Originally urban municipalities had no powers at all but were administered by the township they were in. It wasn't until the 1830s that towns and cities came into existence as political entities, when some were allowed a Board of Police (this is an early term for municipal administration and has nothing to do with a police force). Brockville became the first town in 1832, Toronto the first city in 1834.

The Baldwin Act of 1849

By 1849 there was a clear need for a better structure for urban municipalities, and it had become obvious that there was no need for both district and county. The Baldwin Act (12 Vic c81), passed on 30 May 1849 and coming into effect at the beginning of 1850, accomplished the reform of the entire municipal structure (urban, abolition of districts, powers to counties). This Act created six municipal corporations: townships, counties, police villages,¹ villages, towns and cities. Thus, although many municipalities had come into existence long before, 1850 frequently was the beginning of their legal existence. The Act created villages for the first time – six were created, along with fifteen towns and three cities. Information on villages, towns and cities is in Appendix 5.

Districts were abolished; the counties took over their administrative and judicial functions. The nine districts that contained more than one county were succeeded by united counties, many of which separated over the next few years, although three still exist today. The transfer of power was not simple, so the date of transfer varies from county to county by as much as a few years.

After 1850 it is fairly easy to determine whether a municipality existed and so whether it had records. Prior to 1850 it is more difficult to determine what municipality had jurisdiction (and so had created records).

From 1850 to the 1960s

The “traditional” basic structure of municipal government in Ontario established in 1850 by the Baldwin Act was that of a two tier municipal government. The lower tier consisted of townships, police villages, villages and towns, all of which were part of an upper tier, the county. Cities and an entity called a separated town were not part of a county and carried out the functions of both tiers – they are sometimes called single tier municipalities.

After 1869 the more northern parts of Ontario were gradually divided into districts, starting with Muskoka District. These still exist. They should not be confused with the pre-1850 districts. Information on modern districts is in Appendix 3 along with Counties.

The most stable unit in Ontario is the township but even they were divided occasionally, sometimes with the parts going to different counties. There are two types of townships. A geographic township consists of a particular piece of land. If it has been surveyed then you refer to the geographic township when you quote concession and lot (for example, Burleigh C3 L3). There are about 2 500 geographic townships in Ontario, most of which

¹ Again this has nothing to do with a police force. Apparently no Ontario police village ever had its own police force! The term “police” refers to a very basic form of administration.

(in Northern Ontario) have not been surveyed beyond a definition of their boundaries. The other is an administrative township, which in Southern Ontario usually coincides with the geographic township but may consist of several geographic townships. For example the administrative township of North Kawartha consists of three geographic townships: Burleigh, Anstruther and Chandos.

The number of municipalities gradually grew, peaking in the early 1960s. For a number of years the Municipal Directory contained a count of municipalities. For the years the count was published, the peak occurred in 1962.

Since the 1960s

By the mid twentieth century, problems had arisen with the traditional structure. These came from the two ends of the size scale: several cities had become much too large to function within the structure, and many administrative townships had too small a population to support them.

The “large” problem surfaced first in Toronto where, in the 1950s, the City of Toronto and the cities surrounding it were brought together into a metropolitan super government. This was not entirely successful so, when the problem was addressed in other cities, a slightly different form was used. Starting in 1969 with Ottawa, regional municipalities were created. This entity could be thought of as a “super county” that included all municipalities within it, including cities. Where regional municipalities were created, the county disappeared. Information on regional municipalities is in Appendix 3.

In the early 1990s another entity was created that, to thoroughly confuse everyone, was a municipality called a municipality. Typically they were amalgamations of townships, villages and towns. Information on these strange creatures is in Appendix 6.

Since the 1960s, there has been a steady program of amalgamating municipalities, particularly townships, in order to create a unit large enough to support itself. The result is that today there are about half as many municipalities as there were in 1962.

What It Means to a Genealogist

To use municipal records, you must know which municipality your ancestor was in, and when. Alas, all too often that is the very information you are seeking! You must know the “head of household” because most municipal records are interested in who pays the taxes. If you know only that your ancestor farmed in a particular county in a particular time period, municipal records may be the fastest way to find him, even though it means searching all the townships in the county. If you know that he lived in a particular city in a particular time period, first try directories. Use municipal records only if a directory does not exist.

You need to know how that municipality was administered at that time. The township may have been united with others and the records may have stayed with another township. The village may have been a village only in name and administered as part of a township. An example. Lakefield Village was known as "the village of Lakefield" in the 1850s and was even referred to as such in official records. But it did not become a village until 1874 and so there are no Lakefield records before that date. Instead you have to search Douro Township or Smith Township records.

Municipalities moved more than we realize, for example, Amaranth Township has belonged to Simcoe, Waterloo, Wellington and Dufferin Counties. If you are searching county records for ancestors from that township, you had best pay close attention to dates.

Next, where are the records of that administrative unit? For that you need a historical time line for the unit, for records can be shed anywhere along that line. For example, if you wanted the Assessment Roll for Cardiff Township, Haliburton County, for 1866, why would you ever think to look in the records of North Kawartha Township, Peterborough County? But that is where that Roll is because in 1866 Cardiff Township was part of Peterborough County and was administered by Burleigh Township, which is now part of North Kawartha (see cover photograph). The appendices of this book provide you with that historical time line.

You should be very careful with municipal names. If your ancestor "came from Waterloo," you may have no idea whether that was Waterloo City, Township or County. Fortunately they are all close to each other. But an ancestor "from Hamilton" may have come from Hamilton City or Hamilton Township, which are a considerable distance apart. There are many duplications in Ontario municipal names.

Municipal Records

Municipalities created an astonishing variety of records. There are no records for police villages and hamlets (communities known by name but with no legal existence).

Council Minutes

These are records of the actions of the municipal council. Because we are dealing with local matters (roads, bridges, lost cows) many names appear in the minutes. However it requires a great deal of reading with no estimate of the probability of success.

By-Laws

The legislation of the municipal council. Typically they do not contain names.

Assessment Rolls

Each year the municipality must determine the assessed value of each property in its jurisdiction. It can then establish a mill rate – the amount of taxes to be paid for each dollar of assessed value. The assessor did this, entering information about each property into a large book called the Assessment Roll (top photographs on pages 4 and 5). Much information was collected: the location of each property, its size, the owner or tenant, that person's age (for road duties or for the militia) and religion (to determine which school board the taxes should go to), information about the property and what is on it. Even the number of dogs was recorded. The information varied over time; see Appendix 7 for details.

Assessment is done by lower tier or single tier municipalities. Upper tier municipalities (such as counties) use the assessment of the lower tier to strike their mill rate. The lower tier gathered their taxes.

Assessment rolls provide vital genealogical information since they show that a particular person was on a particular property in a particular year. Sometimes they state the number of people in the family and often list the number of children (for school planning).

An Assessment Roll is usually not in alphabetical order, but is often calendared (sorted by first letter). However if it is ordered by roll number, you will have to search the entire Roll in order to find someone. An Assessment Roll is a public document. Some municipalities used a combined Assessment-Collector Roll.

Collector Rolls

Once the assessor had established the mill rate, the collector took over. He created another large book, the Collector Roll (bottom photographs on pages 4 and 5), in which was recorded the name of the owner or tenant, the location, the amount of taxes and whether they were paid. Usually there was more information; see Appendix 8 for details. Some municipalities consider Collector Rolls as confidential documents since they show whether or not taxes were paid. However a great many Collector Rolls are now in archives where they are easily available.

Some municipalities used a combined Assessment-Collector Roll.

Lands Liable to Taxation

This fascinating book, dated 1 January 1866, was created by the Peterborough County Treasurer's Office. A book was created for each township (photograph on page 126). It lists every piece of property, by Concession and Lot, and the name and date of the original owner. To quote (in slightly condensed form) from the preface, "all lots for which patents have been issued are entered in black ink, those lots which are sold or agreed to be sold but for which a patent has not yet been issued are inserted in red ink, lots which are neither patented, sold, or agreed to be sold but the titles to which are still vested in the Crown are left blank." The township could then keep the book up to date. I have not found a similar document from any other county and the Archives of Ontario was unaware of the existence of such a document.

Clerk-Treasurer Records

These are a bewildering mess of records created by the municipality's clerk and treasurer (who were often the same person). Because the files are so large and contain so many different sorts of records, they are very difficult to search. Usually they are not worth searching for genealogical information, although there may be something unique in there, such as payment for livestock lost to wolves or dogs, or a fence dispute.

Voter Lists

A Voter List contains the names of every person entitled to vote in a particular election, be it municipal, provincial or federal. Early ones are rare; later ones (twentieth century) are not common. They are of course valuable genealogically since they clearly show a person in a general area at a particular time. Some may provide precise addresses. They seem to be almost accidental in municipal records, sometimes found tucked inside an Assessment Roll.

School Lists

At first thought these would seem to be very useful but unfortunately most municipal school records are entirely financial. However they occasionally do contain a list of the children and so can be worth checking. School records at School Boards are more useful than the records filed in a municipality since the former usually contain lists of children.

Births, Marriages, Deaths

At first thought these would seem to be the documents of greatest genealogical interest, but the reality is much less exciting. To understand all this, you need a little historical background.

Prior to 1763, what is now Ontario belonged to France and any vital statistics are therefore in French records. From 1763 to 1831, only ministers of the established churches – Anglican and Roman Catholic – could perform marriages. This was impossible since there weren't enough established ministers, so military commanding officers and justices of the peace performed marriages. Technically they did this illegally, but subsequent legislation legitimated the marriages. Under the Marriage Act of 1831, ministers of other denominations were allowed to perform marriages but they had to report the marriages to the Clerk of the Peace who recorded the marriages in a District Marriage Register. Note that the established clergy (Anglican and Roman Catholic) did not have to report their marriages. In 1857 the District Marriage Registers gave way to County Marriage Registers, again reported through the Clerk of the Peace.

Since the Clerk of the Peace was a District or County official, the District and County Marriage Registers are technically municipal records. However they have been completely transcribed with excellent introductions, so they need not be considered here.² Occasionally fragments of what appear to be the returns that were used to create the Registers turn up buried in municipal records. Sometimes these are fragments that are missing from the Registers (they are notoriously incomplete) so it is important that you report any fragments found (to the appropriate OGS Branch).

There was some attempt to register births and deaths in a similar manner but that met with even less success than marriage registration. The Marriage Registers do have some births and deaths in them.

In 1867 Canada became a nation and the new Province of Ontario looked at means of registering vital statistics. The first Vital Statistics Act, in 1869, required the registration of all births, marriages and deaths, but it was not very successful. The Registrar-General estimated that in 1870 only one-fifth of deaths, one-third of births and two-thirds of marriages were registered.³ The registration occurred through a municipal clerk who sent them to a County Registrar and so copies can be found in both upper- and lower-tier municipal records.

The 1875 Act made it illegal to bury a body without a death certificate thereby improving the registration of deaths. It also removed the County Registrar, so from this date copies are found only in lower tier or one tier municipalities.

The 1896 Act made non-compliance a more serious offence. Other Acts in 1908 and 1919 tightened up the whole process. By about 1920 essentially all BMDs in Ontario were registered.

Therefore, the BMD information found in municipal records should be the same as the information found in the District and County Marriage Registers, and in the provincial vital statistics. However, prior to about 1920 those entities are so incomplete that it is worth checking the municipal records in case they include something that got lost in the process.

The municipal clerk kept the BMD information in a book. He may have kept the original slips of paper that the person reporting the event filled out. Most of these books tend to date from after 1875 (see the two photographs on page 6).

Police Court

The lowest rung on the judicial system, police courts dealt with local petty crime. Their records may be with municipal records, but are more likely to be with county court records. They can be very interesting to search (although the effort is tedious) because they may list accused, defendants, witnesses and court officials.

Board of Health

At first these records may not seem worth searching, but the local Board of Health operated the isolation hospitals and established quarantines. Prior to the First World War these were the only way of containing contagious diseases. Since these diseases were fairly common, there is an excellent chance of finding a relative's name in the lists.

Board of Revision

This was the municipal committee to whom you complained if you felt your taxes were unfair. Many people complained! The Board's minutes are worth searching even though it is a lucky dip, because, if you are lucky, the reasons for requesting a tax reduction will give you insight into your ancestor's life.

Planning Board

The approval of this committee is required in order to create a sub-division or even to erect a building. It did not exist in the very early days. Unless you know that your ancestor did something that might require Planning Board approval, these records are probably not worth searching.

Committee of Adjustment

Sometimes buildings or properties are in violation of planning by-laws. The Committee of Adjustment considers what is to be done, such as the issuance of a variance. Names of people appear here but, like the Planning Board, they are probably not worth searching unless you have reason to expect your ancestor to be there.

Hydro Commission

Many municipalities had their own power system, managed by a Hydro Commission. These started in cities and large towns in the late 1800s. Many rural areas did not receive power until the late 1940s. The records are usually financial but occasionally contain a list of subscribers.

Municipal Telephone Company

Almost exactly the same thing can be said about telephones as was said about power. The only useful thing in the records would be a list of subscribers, and you can probably get that much more easily through the early phone books (they are on microfilm at the Archives of Ontario).

Other Committees

There are many other municipal committees but their records contain very little genealogical information.

Terminology

I have had great difficulty determining a suitable terminology for the uniting of municipalities. “Annexed” and “amalgamated” are technical terms and I have attempted to use them only when I saw them used in official documents (I have seen them misused in many places). In many cases I simply do not know what the proper term is; then I have used “placed in.” That is a non-specific, generic term meaning that they somehow got together! It does imply that a legal entity resulted, and in the absence of contrary evidence I assumed that one did. There were cases where one township was administered by another without any new legal entity being produced – where I knew this I used the term “administered by.” Only a lawyer examining each situation could provide the proper words for municipal unions. I can only hope that my vocabulary does not lead anyone astray.

Broken Front

In the rectangular surveying systems used in laying out Ontario townships, each lot is intended to be rectangular and of the same size (100, 200, or 1 000 acres depending on the surveying system used). However the surveyor encountered rivers and lakes that unfortunately have an untidy habit of not being rectangular. Rivers and lakes tend to be township boundaries. Laying a rectangular grid on these resulted in some lots being not rectangular and smaller than a standard lot. These small, irregular lots are called Broken Fronts, shortened to BF. The short form is included in the description, thus Douro C5 L24BF is a broken front.

Concession

Because township records are so concerned with the holding of land, you need to understand the basic land descriptors. There were several different methods of surveying used in Ontario townships but all of them are rectangular and divide the township into Concessions (counting in one direction) and Lots (counting at right angles). Townships vary enormously in size: a large one may have 25 concessions and 40 lots per concession. Originally concessions were given roman numerals and lots arabic numerals so you will see “IV 20” (lot 20 on concession 4) but the modern method is to write “C4 L20.” Depending on the surveying method a lot may consist of 100, 200, or 1 000 acres. In southern Ontario the 200 acre lot is most common – this is called a Double Front. Each lot was then divided into two in order to make a 100 acre farm. The halves are described as East and West (or North and South) so the typical description is “C5 L3 N1/2.” A 50 acre farm would be described as “C5 L3 NE1/4.”

Usually a road (called a concession road or line) runs between the concessions and another road runs at right angles every five or six lots. Usually not all the roads are built but the concept is there and the road allotment may still exist. Unfortunately the concession roads are often described as (eg) "Concession 5". It is the land that is the concession, not the road. In a Double Front system one side of the road is a different concession than the other side, so you could have a farm in Concession 4 occupied by a farmer who "lives on concession (road) 5." It is essential to be aware of this when dealing with family stories, newspaper reports and so on.

Gore

"A triangular piece of land" (Oxford International Dictionary). Ontario was surveyed on a rectangular system. Most townships are reasonably rectangular. Most lots within a township are rectangular. Occasionally there were bits that did not fit. These are called Gores and I suppose they are usually somewhat triangular. "An irregular piece of land" would be a better definition in Ontario. There was a Gore District (stretching west from the present city of Hamilton). There are gore townships; for example, Toronto Gore. You will see references to gore lots, although the term "broken front" is more likely.

Line – see Concession

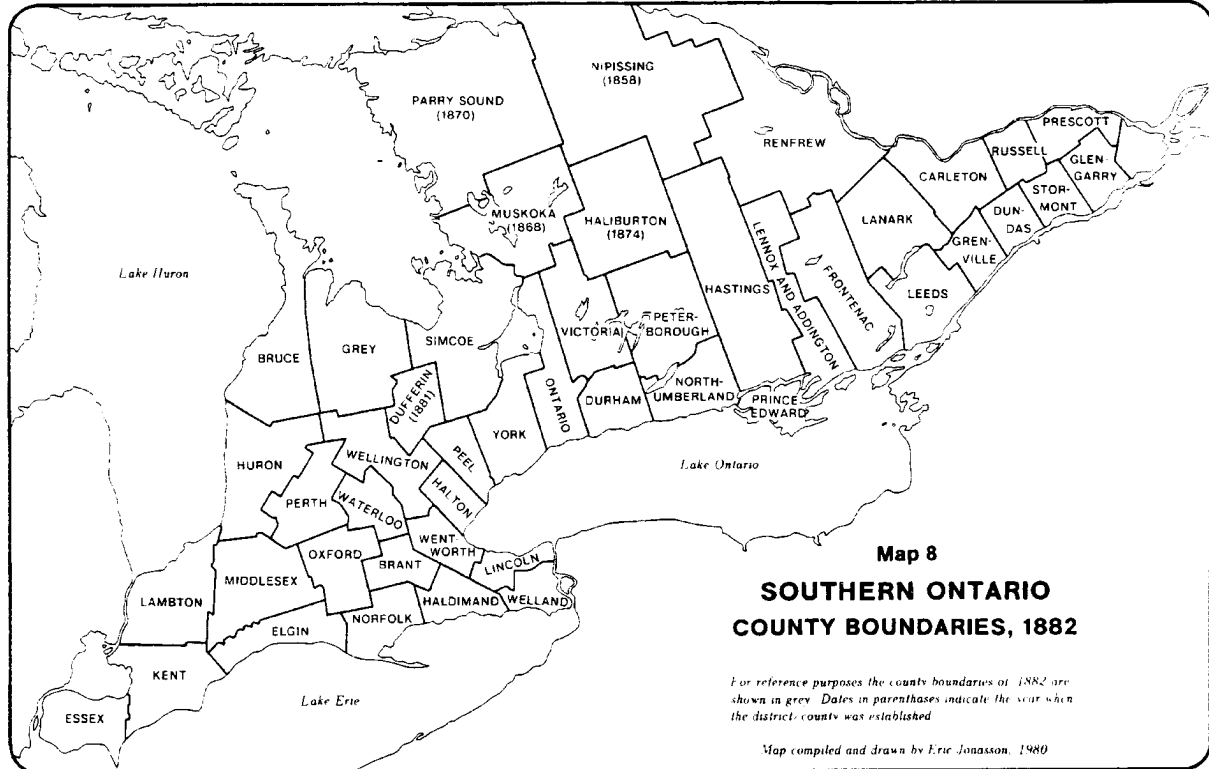

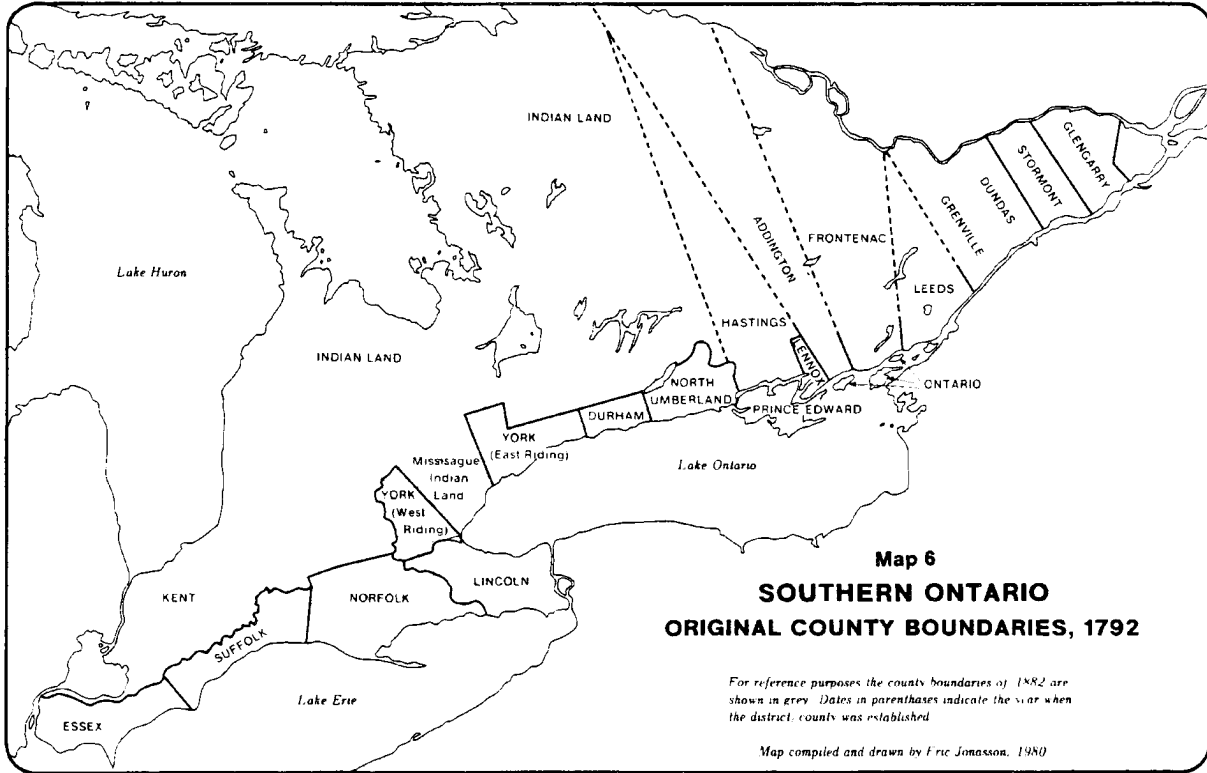

Lot

In townships, see Concession.

In urban areas, see Plan.

Plan

All property in Ontario was originally surveyed into a township concession and lot, even land now in the middle of large cities. This descriptor worked well for 50 and 100 acre farms but in urban areas a different method had to be used. Urban areas were divided into small land areas, each called a lot (not to be confused with a township lot), which typically had one house or building on it. At first the lots were described in relation to the street it was on but this quickly became too complex, so developers were required to file a registered plan with the land office showing the lots, which are numbered, and the development's relationship to the original township concession and lot. In 1853 my great-great-grandfather purchased "lot 6 on the east side of Queen Street" in Lakefield. A check with the plan of Lakefield shows that Queen Street was numbered from south to north so it is possible to locate the lot. A more modern descriptor would refer to "lot 27 on registered plan 2734 in municipality x."

These maps were taken from Families Vol. 20, no. 2 (1981). The other map in this series shows County Boundaries, 1851. Maps compiled and drawn by Eric Jonasson, 1980.

Appendix 1

Numbered Townships

In the very early days of Ontario, the townships were numbered instead of named, probably due to the pressure of the incoming loyalist refugees. Early documents are not entirely consistent in the use of the numbers.

The information below is an exact copy of an unidentifiable document in private hands. From its appearance it is almost certainly a Library Bulletin from the Ontario Ministry of Treasury Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, likely dated in or around 1987. The document was missing its front page, hence the uncertainty. Unfortunately no library has a set of Library Bulletins, not even that of the Ontario Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing (successor to the Ontario Ministry of Treasury Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs).

Numbered Townships Name Conversion List for Upper Canada

1. Names of Twps commencing at the Lower Canada boundary

	Lancaster
1	Charlottenburg
2	Cornwall
3	Osnabruck
4	Williamsburg
5	Matilda
6	Edwardsburg
7	Augusta
8	Elizabethtown
9	Yonge
10	Escot

Lancaster was not originally numbered (known as Lake Twp to 1787 and also earlier as the Sunken Twp) and therefore Charlottenburg was known as #1

2. Names of twps of military settlement

1	Bathurst
2	Drummond
3	Beckwith
4	Goulburn

3. Names of Twps 'below Cataraqui' (according to the UEL manuscript list: bound volume, nd)

- 1 Pittsburg
- 2 Leeds
- 3 Lansdowne
- 4 Escot
- 5 Yonge
- 6 Elizabethtown
- 7 Augusta
- 8 Edwardsburg

NB: A correspondence of names between the UEL list and other land records would strongly suggest that there is an overlapping of twp numbers from Escot to Edwardsburg. It is highly probable that the UEL list, which almost certainly predates 1785 in its original data, uses a numbering system which had not been officially accepted by the Surveyor General's Office in Quebec. However, the numbering of Pittsburg, Leeds, and Lansdowne does tally with various land board certificates in the mid-1780s.

4. Names of Twps "above Cataraqui" (Midland Dist)

- 1 Kingston
- 2 Ernestown
- 3 Fredericksburgh
- 4 Adolphustown
- 5 Marysburgh
- 6 Sophiasburgh
- 7 Ameliasburgh
- 8 Sidney
- 9 Thurlow
- 10 Richmond

5. Names of Twps in the Mississauga Tract

- 1 Toronto
- 2 Trafalgar
- 3 Nelson

6. Names of Twps in Nassau Dist

- 1 Newark (Niagara since 1800)
- 2 Stamford
- 3 Grantham
- 4 Louth
- 5 Clinton
- 6 Grimsby
- 7 Saltfleet
- 8 Barton

7. Names of Twps on north bank of Grand River

- 1 Onondaga
- 2 Seneca

Appendix 4

Townships and Improvement Districts

This appendix attempts to list every administrative township that has ever existed in Ontario. The occasional geographic township is listed if it belongs in the history of an administrative township. It is surprisingly difficult to determine which townships are or were administrative units.

Some of the administrative history of each township is given. The first line of the township entry is of the form:

Name, a/b/c, d/e, Hx, Ry

where Name is the name of the township

- a date of first survey, an “x” means that a predecessor township was surveyed. A date range (1819–21) means it took a while to complete the survey. A set of dates (1819, 1821) means the township was surveyed twice.
 - b date of first legal settler, an “x” means settlement occurred when the area was a predecessor township.
 - c date when it started functioning as a township and so is likely to have records. An “x” indicates that it never was a political township. This date may be that of incorporation (particularly after 1850), or the date of a known meeting, or the date of the start of records. It is NOT the “date of creation” since that may have been years before any other activity occurred.
 - d the original county the township was in
 - e the county it was in in 2003 (if different), a “-” indicates that the township no longer exists as a separate political unit.
- x a number indicating where information about a municipal history can be found
- 0 Morley (see Bibliography for complete reference)
 - 1 Aitken – 1951–1977 (see Bibliography for complete reference)
 - 2 Aitken – 1977–1987
 - 3 Aitken – 1987–1997
 - 4 see the Family History Library Catalogue at <www.familysearch.org>
- y a number indicating where information on the location of records can be found.
- 1 Original or microfilm at the Ontario Archives. See <www.archives.gov.on.ca/english/virtualrr/info22> for more details.
 - 2 Microfilm created by the Genealogical Society of Utah (and so available through the Mormon Family History Centres) and a copy at the Ontario Archives.

3 Microfilm created by the Genealogical Society of Utah (available through the Mormon Family History Centres) but no copy at the Ontario Archives.

That first line may be followed by other lines giving the date of certain events in the life of the township, such as movement from one county to another, splits, amalgamations, and so forth.

When using this data, you should be aware that it is difficult to be accurate on the dates of any of it, particularly with the older pre-1850 townships. In particular the date of the first European settler will be open to much argument. In many cases there is ample evidence of the existence of a township long before its incorporation, even with townships incorporated after 1850. Even official sources disagree as to when a township came into existence. This is due to a number of reasons. The records may simply not exist, not even the acts that established the municipality. Municipalities may have functioned without any legal existence. Many municipalities were created by acts in one year but to come into effect on a date in the following year (usually Jan 1). In these cases I have listed the later year. The Bureau of Industries' 1902 list is particularly remarkable for providing dates one year later than other sources, probably due to this reason. Some municipalities were created to come into effect when certain conditions were met (such as a population of 1 000) and that may have occurred several years later. Again I have attempted to provide the later date. But still there is much unexplained disagreement among sources. In the end I have used judgement and, realizing that I am providing information on when records might be found, I have tended to use the earlier of contradicting dates. Better to search and find records do not exist than to not search and miss valuable information.

Many apparently United Townships do not seem to have had any legal existence, raising the suspicion that new townships may have simply been administered by another township without any legal structure. For simplicity I have listed them as United Townships, although some that lasted only a few months have not been listed separately but only as a note under the constituent townships.

An interesting situation occurs when a township is split. One of the new entities (called the senior township) retains the incorporation of the original township, while the other will be newly incorporated. Thus you will see the oddity of a township seemingly being incorporated years before it came into existence. The Bureau of Industries' 1902 report frequently has a different opinion as to which is the senior township.

It is not possible to provide the location of every municipality's records. First it would take years to seek them all out; second this would then be a multi-volume set! I encourage individual OGS Branches to do this detailed work for the municipalities in their region.

Many of the above problems could be solved by a careful search of all local township records and histories. By the time you have gone through this list, I think you will understand why that has not been done here. Individual OGS Branches can do this detail work. I look forward to corrections from them and from readers that can go into the next edition of this work.

Many townships have a directional (north, south, etc) as part of their names. In nearly every case this indicates a common ancestor. In order to keep these historically related townships together, I have in all cases put the directional after the name. Thus North Monaghan and South Monaghan are listed as Monaghan, North and Monaghan, South, which keeps them together and with their ancestor Monaghan Twp. I have done this only for townships; communities and municipalities are listed with their names in
