Appendix 6

Modern Municipalities

This appendix lists that twentieth century oddity, the municipalities named Municipality. To save space I have shortened "Municipality" to "M."

The first line gives name, county or Regional Municipality at establishment/county or RM in 2003. A "-" indicates that the Municipality no longer exists.

Appendix 7

Layout of Assessment Roll (1855–1925)

The assessor gathered a bewildering amount of information, some required by the colony/ provincial government, some required by the county and some by the municipality. The appearance of the roll may vary from municipality to municipality, but the basic information is usually the same.

The first list below shows what is in an assessment roll from 1855 to 1925. If a date is followed by a question mark, I have not seen a copy of that roll and I am not sure that item is in it. City assessment rolls could be slightly different because of the need to gather information on businesses. The contents of the rolls for Hamilton are at the end of this appendix.

Layout of Collector Roll (1852–1920)

Collector Rolls are more consistent than Assessment Rolls, and contain less information. They seem to have a better survival rate, so they may be all that you can find for your time period. Although many Collector Rolls are in archives, some municipalities regard them as private documents since they indicate whether or not taxes were paid. If you meet this situation, a bit of diplomacy may result in a staff person checking the year in question to see if your person is there.

If a date is followed by a question mark, I have not seen a copy of that roll and I am not sure that item is in it.

About Genealogical Standards of Evidence: A Guide for Genealogists rev'd 2nd ed.

Brenda Merriman

Genealogical evidence is the information or data that help us to identify an individual, or the relationship between individuals. In describing how we establish or argue point of identification through the use of various sources, we often see or hear — and use — such words as “evidence” or “proof” or “documentation.” Because the genealogical community is constantly revising and updating how to establish such evidence, the author has completely revised and updated this essential tool.

Here you'll find primary sources, finding aids, microform availability and significant secondary sources such as relevant articles and books. There's even help with accessing the records from a distance.

Understanding Ontario First Nations Genealogy Records: Sources and Case Studies

Dr. David K. Faux

“His ... work is ... praiseworthy, a recommended acquisition for genealogical libraries.” — The New York Genealogical and Biographical Record, March 2003.

After the Revolutionary War in the United States, the people of the Six Nations, who had remained loyal to Britain, made their way to Ontario and eventually to what is today's Brant County. In documenting his own family history, Dr. Faux discovered many unusual sources of genealogical data. In this useful work he shares his finds and suggests ways to go about your own search.

Index to the Upper Canada Land Books

Susan Smart ed.

These indexes record all petitioners who came before the Executive Council of the Land Board of Upper Canada, as well as surnames found within the petition itself, and includes details such as petitioner's residence, occupation or location of the land grant. It also notes the petition number, which will lead the researcher to another set of records available on microfilm from the National Archives. The tenth volume, social history, will be published shortly.

Wilfred R. Lauber

During the War of 1812 citizen-soldiers served alongside British regular troops. Many who served were entitled to land grants and the records of those 4,500 grants, held in Library and Archives Canada, are here indexed. Index to Land Settlement in Thunder Bay District

Art Gunnell

Extensive land settlement in Thunder Bay District started when the Ontario government passed the Free Grant and Homesteads' Act in 1868. The information in this book is taken from government records, the mining patents issued by the Department of Mines, and the land grants provided by the government as a reward for military service. This index covers 40 townships and gives the name of the first grantee or mining claim holder, the exact location of the land and the date of the patent, listed by township with an alphabetical surname index. The land transactions range from the 1870s to about 1950, with over 8,425 names listed.
